

Cory Dransfeldt

Now

About

I block ads

05.23.2023

I block ads in the browser.

I block ads at the DNS level.

I block analytics, metrics, reporting and diagnostic logging.

I block programmatic pleas to disable ad-blocking.

I block the ping attribute on URLs.

I block tracking beacons.

I strip UTM campaign tags.

I unshorten URLs.

I block the page visibility API.

I stop videos from autoplaying.

I block prompts to install your app.

I block all cookies that aren't strictly required for your site to function.

I opt out of allowing apps to ask to track me.

I filter sponsored content out of the RSS feeds I follow.

I block email pixel trackers.

I provide a masked email address.

I unsubscribe from your mailing list (and block your address if I can't).

I don't answer the phone unless you're in my contacts.

I block and report SMS messages.

I pay a company to wrangle data brokers.

I throw your physical mail in the recycling without opening it and unsubscribe from it when I can.

I block ads, and you should too.

*“Let the products sell themselves
Fuck advertising, commercial psychology
Psychological methods to sell should be destroyed”*

Minutemen, Shit from an Old Notebook, 1984

---

Reposts

Likes

Comments

@cory how do you manage the cookies? Do you disable by default and selectifly allow necessary domains?

05.23.2023

@pr3d I opted for the Super Agent plugin, set my preferences in the plugin and let it set that restrictive consent level for each site without seeing the banner

05.23.2023

---

Cory Dransfeldt

I'm a software developer in Camarillo, California. I enjoy hanging out with my beautiful family and 4 rescue dogs, technology, automation, music, writing, reading and tv and movies.

Uses • Referrals • Cory Dransfeldt • © 2023